

Victorian Consortium for Public Health
MASTER OF PUBLIC HEALTH

INFORMATION NIGHT

Are you a health professional - or interested in moving into Health and wanting to increase your qualifications?

Here is an exciting opportunity to gain an internationally recognized postgraduate degree while studying with four of Victoria's leading universities.

Public Health is the combination of humanities and science that provides the knowledge, skills and practices to protect, promote and restore population health. A postgraduate degree in public health is highly relevant to the professional development and continuing education of a broad range of health professions.

The Master of Public Health course provides graduates with the knowledge and skills necessary to conduct public health research; develop, analyse and implement policy; and to plan and evaluate health services and programs.

For part of the Master of Public Health, students from the four universities in the Consortium attend lectures and tutorials together at a shared central location (University of Melbourne, Parkville Campus). Students then progress to study a specialised stream through their university of enrolment.
